DR. KING STRUCK BY AMERICAN NAZI

CONFEDERATE'S SUNSET
WHITE MAN'S DAWN

AMERICAN NAZI PARTY

Parts One & Two
On Windows Compatible Disc

This collection of The Rockwell Report, presented in four parts, could quite legitimately be considered as yet another history of the American Nazi Party by itself. The story as it was happening and told by the man of the hour himself: George Lincoln Rockwell.

This publication was the Commander's own vehicle, what he called his "meat and potatoes" commentary, targeted at the average, working White man in 1960s America. This was the Commander's personal report to the membership as well as any member of the public fortunate or interested enough to secure a copy.

Rockwell, during the conservative phase of his political career, that is, through the 1950s, only wanted to serve, only wanted to carry out his strong sense of duty to the nation he loved and which he realized was in the most grave danger from within.

It was at this time that Rockwell became familiar with The Dan Smoot Report, put out by a former FBI agent, one who knew the score and wasn't afraid to speak it. No doubt Rockwell patterned his own report after this one which has been an inspiration to him.

As with Adolf Hitler, once Rockwell saw that no one was stepping forward to handle the urgent task at hand, he undertook it on his own. He himself stressed that what was most critically missing from Right Wing opposition to Communist subversion in the United States was visible leadership and open action in the streets, in front of the public. He made no apologies when the business and publicational end of things would suffer because of his placing top priority on action and the gaining of publicity.

With the Party having been founded in March of 1959, the initial entry of The Rockwell Report didn't appear until the fall of 1961. Into this publication, which started out as a stapled bulletin in format and evolved into a magazine, Rockwell put more of himself than any of his other Party organs.

He borrowed heavily from The Rockwell Report for a great deal of the content of his second book, White Power. So much so that a person might have begun to think of White Power as a Rockwell Report compendium.

That second book had been hastily put together in 1967, just at the time when the Commander had decided to change the name and the format of The Rockwell Report to White Power, a tabloid-size newspaper. And so he was able to look back upon the entire output of the former while looking forward to the future of the latter with, hopefully, a much wider audience and acceptance.

But, as history is aware, George Lincoln Rockwell was assassinated on August 25th, 1967.

What differentiated The Rockwell Report from the other five or so official American Nazi Party publications was the somewhat higher level of intellectual input alongside a still significant amount of the action which Commander Rockwell placed such a high emphasis upon. Action, action, action... But get it properly straightened around in your head while you're at it.

The Commander was one of a few in the Hard Right of those days who was savvy enough not only strategically but philosophically to know that practically nothing taking place on the American scene - or anyplace else - could be taken at face value nor could any of it be reacted upon in like manner. The wire-pullers, the ulterior motivations, the sell-outs and - always - the role of the Jews had to be factored in as this country drew more away from the good and the desire of the White majority and over to the cause of some malignant hidden agenda.

It was primarily to this end that Commander Rockwell dedicated the purpose of this publication.

The reader will note the heavy focus by Rockwell upon the likes of Barry Goldwater, for example. Rockwell knew that Goldwater, besides being a Jew, was a deliberate plant to wreck the Conservative Republican movement and he did his level best to awaken his fellow conservatives to the fact.

Likewise, a great deal of attention is given over to that scoundrel, Martin Luther King, generally known to the Hard Right to be a disciplined and trained Communist agitator. The Commander, again, did his utmost to awaken the general public to this reality.

There is much intimate Party history in these issues as well. One day spent with Rockwell is a highlight. There is action also as in the issue devoted to the Nazi crashing of a Communist meeting. A virtual "Who's Who" of ANP personnel is featured in the "Heroes" issue. Rockwell's up-to-the-minute research is pretty impressive also, as in the Kennedy assassination issue, etc.

The first two volumes of The Rockwell Report were issued faithfully, like clock-work every two weeks but, in comparison with later volumes where the frequency may have slid but the size increased, may have appeared a bit stodgy. However, as with every other aspect of ANP activity, things had definitely hit their stride by 1965.

National issues such as Vietnam and the race riots in major U.S. cities assumed front and center stage in The Rockwell Report, about as they were doing in the minds of most true Americans. Here were two lines drawn in the sand if ever there was truly any such thing. By the middle of the decade of the 1970s it was all over. Very little fight, mostly sell-out. The United States of America, the way it had been conceived, was no more.

Mercifully, Rockwell had already died a martyr's death, sparing him the heartbreak of all this.
